Security cut from hospital

BY TAMARA CUNNINGHAM

Didsbury Review

Didsbury's hospital will be getting by without in-house security next spring as part of Alberta Health Service's ongoing attempts to cut costs.

The move to eliminate two full-time guard positions from the Didsbury Hospital comes after a provincewide comparison of security services.

The medical superboard found that 40 per cent of its hospitals were making do without protective services while others had more personnel than was needed.

"What we're trying to do is create a better balance of resources across the province...so rural type sites that never had protective services before, get access," said Tom Weeks, Alberta Health Service's director of protective services and parking.

Beginning April 1, the province will adopt a new model that will mix peace officers with contract workers in many of Alberta's urban centres and send out mobile patrol units to rural communities

Didsbury and 38 hospitals similar in size will be using the mobile model, which will give centres twice-weekly patrols. Nine of those hospitals will have in-house security cut, while the rest have always done without.

Weeks said AHS assumes if 30 hospitals with high vol-umes of patients have gotten by without physical interference, so will the rest. He is confident there will be no addi-tional risk for Albertans.

The new model will also collapse seven regional dispatch centres to make way for a mega dispatch in Edmonton.

Two hundred positions are expected to be lost, with 100 of those absorbed by contract workers. The hospital security force will be reduced by 90 people or 20 per cent overall. Weeks said.

He could not say how much money will be saved by moving protective services to a contractor because the position hasn't yet gone to tender.

Guy Smith, president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, said the plan doesn't make any sense.

"(Alberta Health Services) is doing this on the basis that it will save money but we have seen contract work before and it winds up costlier and less effective," Smith said. Four years ago, Calgary experienced high turnover with its contract staff and created a full in-house security team as a result.

Last week, the union planned protests at four Calgary hospitals but cancelled them because of the extreme cold. Smith instead set up an information table at Foothills Medical Centre and encouraged rural hospitals, like Didsbury, to do similar protests.

On Monday, 50 staff from the Didsbury Hospital wore red armbands in protest of the loss of security. Their fear is that "We are not sure where they will go next to make signifi-cant cuts to the budget and we're worried," said Sherry Tschritter, an AUPE chair for general support staff in "Our hospital is understaffed as it is...we need more to run the hospital efficiently, not less.

Alberta Health Services said by no means are layoffs or moves to contract employees a trend - though the union expects this is just the beginning.
"There is no doubt about it. Alberta Health Services will be looking at other areas to contract out," Smith said.

Balance exercises help seniors prevent falls

BY TAMARA CUNNINGHAM

By the time baby boomers reach their stumbling prime, Aspen Ridge Lodge will have perfected its balance program. Therapist Brandee Bowman designed the lodge's first bale program to help residents ward off falls

The project - Steady as U Go - has had such a high success rate, she is now considering branching the program out into the general community.

"Balance and strengthening is a huge movement right now in fall prevention," Bowman said. "We heard that Alberta Health Services is going to look at a provincial strategy and thought we'd be proactive on this." Falls happen to one in three seniors living in the community and cause 90 per cent of hip fractures.

In 2006, the Alberta Centre for Injury Control and Research reported that nearly 7,000 hospital admissions and 19,000 emergency visits were because of a tumble.

"Falls are huge...and I think people are very much aware of that, but what people don't always know is that falls are preventable. This program is proof of that.

Bowman took eight seniors aged 70 to 93 into her pilot program, who wanted to walk without fear of falling. They had lost muscle mass and strength, their gait was more shuffle than stride and they had poor posture - all affecting the way they moved.

Beginning September 21, they were introduced to a three art program. It had them listening to lectures about what leads to falls, performing exercises and completing an obstacle course that included rising out of a chair and stepping over a series of pool noodles.

wasn't easy, Bowman said.

Her seniors had to let go of their canes and walkers and lift their feet over the short noodles or walk with their eyes on the wall instead of on their feet.

The program was breaking habits and it frustrated her

But at the end of the 10-week period, they all showed marked improvement. Initially six of eight seniors were at high risk of falling and by the end of the session, not one was at risk and all had shown a 14 per cent improvement.

In another test, which looked at how fast a senior could rise out of a chair, 11 per cent showed progress from initial Ninety-three-year-old George Wilkins said he noticed "quite a bit of improvement.

Last April, he came to the lodge in a wheelchair, after falling and breaking his pelvis and several ribs. Not a man to sit long, he followed a series of exercises designed by Bowman and eventually moved from chair to walker

He had hoped the balance class would allow him to cast way walking aids all together.

"This was a good program. I certainly came a long ways, but I am not without this yet," he said, pointing to the walker a few feet in front of him.

He hopes that will change and uses balance exercises in his room each morning.

Virginia Meyer, manager of the fall prevention program with Alberta Health Services Calgary, said this rural program is good news and wishes more like it could be offered consistently across the Calgary zone.

A lot of times a clinician will see a senior who's had a fall or two and knows the benefit of group exercise for balance and strengthening...but there are not enough places to refer eniors to," she said.

Meyer said too often seniors keep quiet about falls, thinking it will be seen as the last straw to living independently

'It's unfortunate, but if we can get the message out there that falls are entirely preventable then they could do some thing about the risk," she said.

The province's health zones started creating fall preven tion strategies like balance programs in 2003 for home care and acute facilities but eventually Alberta Health Services would like to develop a provincewide program.

Recreation therapist, Brandee Bowman gives Myra Underhay a lesson in balance. The new program at the lodge helps seniors prevent falls.

Didsbury child care program wins new spaces

Parents waiting for after school child care were knocked off the list in October when 16 new spaces came available.

Didsbury Out of School Care Association opened spots for parents on the wait list, after hearing the government was about to give them thousands in funding.

money towards tables and chairs, supplies, upgrades and anything else needed to create more space Jolene Leutschaft, program co-ordinator.

'All the parents on the wait-list - about seven or eight - have their children in the program now.

For the last three year creating room in child care for students has been a provincewide issue and government has committed itself to providing more child care

In the Central region,

We have been working with communities address needs of fami-lies...and what we heard lies in Didsbury was there was a real shortage of out of school placements...to get 16 new spaces is really exciting," said Rhonda Coubrough, spokesperson for CFSA

In Didsbury, the need for child care escalated this fall, when daycares announced they'd no longer take in school-aged children.

The government had created new regulations that would have centres employ one staff member for every 15 children in Grades 1 through 6 and one staff for every 10 children in early childhood programs

The change would have those licensed to have students, employ addi-tional staff and hold spots for children who used daycare in the mornings and afternoons. It didn't seem feasible for the owners of the two daycares.

Parents, who heard of the change in August, began turning to DOSCA for child care, but the organization could only take in 24 students. The remaining went on a wait-

There are no plans to move yet, Leutschaft said.

Municipal government is 'Big Government' on the Prairies

leaders meet each other and provincial governments might prompt the odd protest but municipal activities n make front page headlines

That's all the more unfortunate considering how much municipal government is responsible for and the level of variation in their performances across Canada. In 2008 the average Canadian municipality took in $4,971 of revenue per household. It also managed $18,228 worth of capital assets (mainly infrastructure like roads and sewers), backed by $1,963 of long-term debt for each of those households, which each paid $102 in interest charges. When put beside household balance sheets, these figures start to bring the economic significance of local government into perspective

If you're in favour of bigger government, municipali-ties in the three Prairie provinces compare favourably to these national averages. The comparative figures for the average Prairie municipality are $7,301 of revenue, $25,121 of recorded capital assets, and $3,613 of long-term debt serviced at an interest cost of $173 per household.

Perhaps the biggest difference between Prairie municipalities and others is the quality of reporting that citizens can expect when it comes to finance and service performance. In my review of 75 municipali-ties across Canada, four out of the top 10 were from

Saskatchewan municipalities report reasonably, notwithstanding the fact that their annual reports don't contain the value of their capital assets, putting them behind the first step towards first class capital

As with most governments, municipalities are a natural monopoly, where a single provider is generally the most efficient market structure. The implication is "consumers" – meaning the people who pay taxes and user fees and use roads, garbage collection, and recreational services — don't have the same level of choice in who provides these essential services as they would in a competitive market.

In the absence of real, competitive pressure, it is important that municipalities help residents under-stand what services are being provided and at what cost with numerical performance targets and actual performance achievements that are linked to areas of expenditure. For example, residents of Prince George can see that emergency services dispatch has a target of notifying the appropriate service within 60 seconds of receiving a call 90 per cent of the time. Comparisons with performance targets and prior years' performance are the best substitute that residents can have for the absent option of shopping somewhere else for their municipal services

In competitive industries, competition forces all producers to reach a standard in order to remain viable. Alas, there is little competition in the municipal sector. The vast range of difference in performance and even the way that performance is reported on suggest that the natural monopoly status of municipalities has left considerable efficiency gains on the table.

Taken together, Canada's municipalities represent a roughly $65 billion per year industry, or about one dol-lar in 20 of GDP. At five per cent of GDP, a 20 per cent increase in the productivity of municipal government would add a full percentage point to the national wealth. With these figures in mind, it might be time for some rioters elsewhere to focus their attention closer to home on city hall, and ask their municipality to follow the example set by most Western Canadian munic

Highway upgrades fail to improve safety

As I scan the front page photo of the Dec. 1 issue of the Carstairs Courier, I am struck by several things. I extend my sincerest condolences to the family of the young man slain on the highway, an event that could have involved any of us who travel the highways. I also sympathize with the many stranded motorists involved in these chain reaction accidents who spent many stressful hours in terrible circum-

I applaud and am grateful for all EMS, police, fire department and disaster services personnel who went out in horrid weather to be of assistance. As a normal citizen who travels the highways a lot, I wish to express my thanks for the

I have lived here for 30 years What I find most frustrating with this whole situation is remember-ing the weeks and weeks of tie-ups all along this very same piece of roadway all last summer. The high-way was being "improved". I saw millions of dollars being spent. Huge machines carrying thousands of loads of clay and fill moved up and down the highway for months. Thousands of man-hours of labour were paid. At the end of all this work, we had almost the same looking highway but with lovely broader shoulders. We still have the deep, big coulees that should have been filled in.

After spending millions of taxayer dollars, what has improved? We still have the same results and the scenario repeats. The same car pileups that have plagued this stretch of highway for many, many winters will continue for many, many more years. But don't look for any further improvement in the future. After all, that road was all fixed up just last summer.

In my mind, the boys in charge of all these dollars for this improvement project have a lot of explaining to do.

Excited delirium not a cause of death the RCMP/police-created term "excited delirium" for cause of death, as ridiculous as I do?

We, the public, cannot accept this created phrase from our Taser triggermen/women happy

What's next? "Yes, Your Honour I shot the victim several times but he actually died from loss of blood. My actions certainly had little to do with his death, he must have been a hemophiliac or someing." Or perhaps, "Sure, stabbed the victim repeatedly, but he actually died from heart failure. He must have had an underlying heart condition, so how could my actions be accountable for his accountable death?

Repeated shocks of several thousand volts (some times over and over again) is the foremost and primary reason our fellow Canadians continue to be killed by the people in society we appoint to serve and protect.

Is there some sort of critical failure in the training of our police forces that these brave men and women feel the need to rely so quickly on such a dangerous weapon when faced with persons in distress or conflict? Have our police given up on com-munication skills, de-escalation techniques and other non-lethal alterna-

The medical community doesn't even accept "excited delirium" as a real term!

Bylaw Corner - Snow Removal

After a great November, like it or not, the snow and the cold are here. With the snow of cours nes the shoveling. I need to remind everyone that the bylaw requires you to shovel the snov on the side walks adjacent to your homes within 24 hours. Those of you with corner lots are responsible for the sidewalks on either side of your lots. Also when shoveling it is important not to shovel the snow out onto the street, place the excess snow on your lawn or boulevard. If you are clearing an area of the street in front of your home you cannot pile the snow anywhere on the street. You must pile it off the street or the sidewalk

Under the snow removal bylaw there are two offences

- Failing to remove snow from the sidewalk adjacent to your lot within 24 hours of the last snowfall.
- Piling snow on the sidewalk or street.

Please dress warm and watch the ice. If you are a senior and are not able to shovel your own snow, please make arrangements to have it removed. Didsbury Seniors Support Services at 403-335-4391 may be able to assist you in finding a suitable solution.

December's early snowfall will help launch a new dogsporting event this January leading up to the Rosebud Run Sled Dog Classic.

The first annual Rosebud Run Mush Rush is a mesh of canine powered sports with races in dog sledding, skijoring and cross-country skiing

It'll be featured January 2.
"This is more of a local event to get people excited about the big race," said Bill Windsor, president of the Rosebud Run Sled Dog Classic board.

Organizers hope the laid-back affair draws in experienced and amateur mushers who want to give their dogs experience in a race situa-be trained but will not have experience racing this sea son. The mush rush is an opportunity to put them in a competitive situation.

"It's a just-for-fun event so it doesn't matter how well (the dogs) do," Windsor said.

He said the two-heat event which starts at 9 a.m., should extend the use of the trail. It's been packed and ready Rochelle Byiers was out Friday morning testing out and said although the snow is deep in spots the trail was a good run. She is looking forward to using it for the mush rush. "I think it's great that they are doing this second event...its just for fun and anyone can go," she said.

"I am not sure people realize how lucky we are to have

This is the first year Byiers is participating in dog-powered sport events, including the Rosebud Sled Dog Classic January 30 and 31.

Her son left his racing dogs at home when he left for college, so she's picked up ski-joring and sledding. Rick Wannamaker has been her

The longer race at the end of January is expected to draw at least 200 spectators and anywhere from 30 to 50 mushers from across the continent.

It is the only Albertan sled dog race with a prize purse about $5,600 for six classes and has gained some notoriety among sprint mushers.

"This is THE event in Alberta and it's hosted right here in Didsbury," Windsor "And it's great for specta tors. Most racers you see the dogs go into the bush and then don't see them again until they come out to the finish line. At the staging area here you can see the

The Rosebud Sled Dog Classic has broken away from the Chamber of Commerce for its fifth annual race, so it can explore more activities than what they could do under the original policies.

"We want to do clinics and adopt a charity to give our proceeds to and we couldn't do that when we were with the chamber," Windsor said.

"People will be seeing more events from this point on, beginning with the mush

Dragon teams take second in tournament

BY TAMARA CUNNINGHAM

Didsbury Review

The Didsbury Dragons senior girls and boys came away from last weekend's tournaments with second place finishes.

During the Friday and Saturday games, the boys overwhelmed Bearspaw Christian School with a 99-28 score and squeezed out a win over rivals Hugh Sutherland of Carstairs with a 67-62 win.

The Dragons lost Saturday against St. Joseph's Collegiate of Brooks, 105-67, to slide into second-place.

"(St.Joseph's) was a really good team ... I would hope by zones we'll have another crack at them ... and close the gap," said Dragons coach Jeff Johnson.

This is the first tournament of the season and it revealed to Johnson where his team needs to be by season's end.

"We are still a rookie team so we need to gain experience in decision-making and that will come as we progress," he said.

In the tournament, post Mark Dueck cleaned the boards, while point guards Nolan McInnis, Keifer Paulgaard and forward James Lefebvre racked up the

Forward Craig Drever also played solid defence

The girls also played a good game in the weekend tournament. They lost by 25 points to St. Joseph's Collegiate but picked up the game against Spruce View School for second place.
"The team needed two points to tie and three points to win and with two seconds on the clock, Mackenzie Code scored three points," Johnson said.

"The girls did pretty good." The senior teams will be facing Innisfail tomorrow in the first league game of the season. The girls match is at 5:30 p.m. and the boys at 7 p.m.

Colts secure weekend wins

BY TAMARA CUNNINGHAM Didsbury Review

The Mountainview Colts hope last weekend's tri-umphs are the start of a winning streak and a precursor to the playoffs.

are feeling pretty good right now. We won our game for a two-win week-end," said defenseman Matt Richardson, after beating the Cochrane Generals, Sunday, 4-1.

In the game played at the Didsbury Memorial Complex, the Colts came at the Generals hard, with Richardson and centre Jason Edwards scoring in the first period.

The home team kept the game in their opponent's end to maintain the 2-0 lead into the second period, where J.R. DeFoe netted a third goal for the Colts.

The Generals, cut the deficit to two goals with a third period goal although less than a minute later for ward Kelly Kohut scored for a 4-1 win.

"I stole it away from a couple of (Generals) at the blue line and it was pretty much a breakaway from there on," Kohut said.
"I pulled a move I used to do when I played midget."

This is the team's first win against the defending league champions this season. In October, the Colts lost to the Generals 4-2 and tied with the team 2-2 last month.

They underestimated us this gan We got the pucks deep and used our bodies to follow through on checks," Richardson said. "And our team is set on the line. We know who we're playing with out there and that is the key to winning.

This win comes after a 6-3 triumph against the Banff Academy Bears Saturday, where Devon Dell made 36 saves in a winning effort.

With a weekend of success, the team is sitting at 5-12-3 and just five points behind the Generals in the central division rankings.

If the team continues on a winning streak - as players hope it may - the Colts could be sitting third in the central division come the new year.

The team will look to continue their winning ways this weekend with a pair of home games. Saturday they play bitter division rivals the Three Hills Thrashers with an 8 p.m. start time

On Sunday they're back at it with their final game before the Christmas break when they host the south divi-sion leading Okotoks Bison who head into this week with a 16-1-1-1 record. Game time is 3:30 p.m. at the Memorial Colts Notes: Friday night in High River, the Colts were on the short end of a 6-1 decision to the High River Tyers. Jason Edwards scored the lone Colts' goal. Jason Arnason made 26 saves in a losing effort. In Saturday's game, the Colts bounced back with a 6-3 win against the Banff Academy Bears. Taylor Olsen and Kody Wickham scored in the first first period...Cody Issler netted a point in the second period, while Matt Richardson, J.R. DeFoe and Gary Lyczewski brought the Colts their first weekend win.
